THIS pamphlet contains an ample display of Mr. Legge's ability and conduct, both in his public and private capacity, to the time of his death. Towards the conclusion of it we are told, that "Mr. Legge being anxious, deirous, the world should know, that he was not turned out for any blemish in his private or public character, he thought it the most satisfactory method of securing his posthumous reputation, to publish the few papers, which explain his case. He apprehended himself intitled to do this, in his own vindication, as the papers contain no secrets, either of state, or of private friendship. They are, agreeably to his desire, here laid before the world, in their original form, with only a previous short narrative of the transactions which occasioned them.

Upon the present Duke of Bolton's accession to his title, in the year 1759, Mr. Legge was solicited to succeed his grace as one of the representatives of the county of Southampton, his own seat in parliament chancing at that time to be vacant. He could not well have been importuned to an undertaking more unpleasant to him, and he declined it more than once, without reserve. The bustle of a popular election was unnatural to his liberal mind and manners; and a relation of that kind to a large county, in which he resided, might appear inconvenient to him, whose hands were at that time filled with public business. But he was prevailed with to accept the offer, by the repeated intreaties of his friends, which were enforced by the plea, that his fortune and character would do credit to a party, which had all his life been countenanced by government, and with which he had ever acted uniformly, though with undissembled moderation and good humour towards the other party. And he had the farther encouragement of hoping, from the interest the crown exerted in his favour, in conjunction with that of the then prevailing party in the county, as well as with his own personal interest, which was very considerable, that his election would not be contested.

However, he fell into the disagreeable work of a contest. His competitor was Mr. Stuart, now Sir Simeon Stuart; and he found Mr. Stuart's interest adopted by a noble lord, with whom Mr. Legge was not at variance, who had no apparent relation of any kind to the county; whom therefore Mr. Legge did not think of consulting, before he resolved to comply with the desire of his friends.

After this county had been canvassed on both sides, Mr. Stuart thought fit to decline, and Mr. Legge received the following letter:

Downing Street, Nov. 25th, Monday Evening.

Dear Sir,

Lord B—te sent to me this morning, and told me, that having an opportunity of saving you, he had embraced it, and done you an act of friendship; for that Mr. Stuart having been with him for his advice, whether to leave or pursue the election, as some of Mr. Stuart's friends thought this critical season of an invasion hanging over the kingdom to be a very improper time for parliamentary contests, his lordship had determined the point for relinquishing the pursuit; in consequence of which Mr. Stuart was to acquaint you with his resolution of declining a poll. Lord B. added, that neither he, nor the greater person, whose name hath been used during the competition, would ever treat you with the more coldness for what hath happened; your part having been taken under an ignorance of their views and intentions; that Lord B. expected however, as he had a claim upon you, in right of friendship, that you will concur with him, and give your aid to the person he shall recommend at a future election. I answered to the last point, that I knew not how far you would think yourself bound in honour to act with the body of whigs on such an occasion; but if this consideration did not hinder, I was sure you would be happy, to give him that or any other evidence of your respect for him.

You will be pleased therefore to consider well, and (if you please) with the advice of your friends, before you give an answer on this head, that may tie you down, for on that answer you plainly see, very much will depend.

I am, Dear Sir,
faithfully Yours,
S. M.

To this Letter Mr. Legge returned the following answer:

"Dear M. Holte, Dec. 5th 1759.

I Return you my thanks for your letter. Since I received it, I have had an opportunity of seeing a little more of the spirit and temper of the county, and can answer it better than I could have done sooner. L—— H——e do me great justice in supposing I was totally ignorant of their concerning themselves at all in the Hampshire election, at the time my engagements were taken. I am obliged to Lord B. for any intentions he had to save me, by the advice he gave to drop the opposition; but if Mr. Stuart, or his friends, had accepted the offer I made, with the concurrence of my friends, at the beginning, and as soon as I discovered what turn the election might take, every wish of Mr. Stuart's had been secured, the peace of the country never interrupted, little less than 2000*l.* a-piece saved to us both, and what is still of more consequence, a month's fermentations of parties been intirely prevented, which never fails to turn them all sour. Many of these good consequences had likewise been obtained, if the gentlemen had consulted, and enabled Lord B. to put an end to the contest, before I left London, when you know how unwilling I was to push it to extremity.

As to the event of the election, there was not the least doubt about it. The county was thoroughly canvassed, and upon as exact returns, as I believe ever are or can be made in a case of this kind, I could have given Mr. Stuart all the doubtful ones and all the neuters, in addition to his own poll, and yet have carried the election by a majority of 1400. I did not come into a single town, (except Alton) where it was not expected every day, that the opinion would be given up, and where almost any odds would not have been laid, that it never came to a poll. Nor do I think, any consultation would have been held about dropping the affair, if all the money subscribed against me, and more, had not been expended, and all probability of carrying the point intirely vanished. This is my own firm opinion and belief, and yet, whoever reads my advertisement will see, that I have acted with the utmost candor, and given my opponents credit for such motives of retreat, as I am sure do them no dishonour. The expence indeed would have been enormous, if the dispute had been carried thorough, and so far I own there is a saving to us both, for I am convinced it would have amounted to above 20000*l.* a-piece. This is a sum I should have felt severely, and yet after my offer to compromise had been rejected, I must and would have spent it, and could have done it, without mortgaging my estate; I leave you to judge, what effect it would have had on Mr. Stuart's.

After saying thus much, I am very far from having any personal dislike to Mr. Stuart; on the contrary, I think he has been cruelly treated by some of his friends, and if the prevailing party in this county will receive him without opposition, I shall be very well satisfied and glad of it. But if the whigs and dissenters, who are very numerous in this county, will make a point of opposing him, it will be impossible for me to declare for him and abandon those, who have supported me, to take part with those against whom they have supported me. This would not only put my own election in jeopardy, but be so ungrateful and so dishonourable a part for me to act, that it would in the same proportion my assistance ineffectual to the person I should join with.

I am &c.
H. B. Legge."

Upon this answer, Mr. Legge returned a verbal message from Lord B. by Mr. M. Dec. 12, 1759, the purport of which was, as it stands upon Mr. Legge's paper,

"That he should bid adieu to the county of Southampton, at the general election, and assist, as far as lay in his power, the P— of W——'s nomination of two members."

To which message a categorical answer was required, and Mr. Legge sent the following, in writing, on the same day:

"Mr. Legge understanding it to be expected, that he (who never had engaged at all in the county of Southampton, if the intentions of L—r H— had been in time communicated to him) shall not only refuse to be chosen himself at the next general election, but assist Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Stuart, in opposition to those, who have supported Mr. Legge, at the late election; is determined to submit to any consequences, rather than incur so great a disgrace."

Lord B. sent a reply the same day, which M. wrote down from his mouth, in the following words:

"The instant Mr. Legge represents himself as bound in honour not to decline standing for Hampshire, at the next general election, Lord B. is firmly persuaded, that the P— will by no means desire it of him; but he does, out of real friendship to Mr. Legge, beseech him to consider very seriously, whether triumphing over the P——'s inclinations at present, Lord B. has any method left of removing prejudices, that the late unhappy occurrences have strongly impressed the P—— with, than by being enabled to assure him, that Mr. Legge will, as far as shall be in his power, co-operate with his R—— H——'s wishes, at the next general election."

Mr. Legge returned the following final answer:

"Though in fact Mr. Legge has been so unhappy, as to find himself opposed to the P— of W—'s inclinations, yet as to intention, Mr. Legge feels himself entirely blameless; and has too high a veneration for the P— of W—'s justice to think he will conceive lasting prejudices against any man for resisting those inclinations, of which he was totally ignorant.

As Mr. Legge flatters himself this consideration will induce the P— of W—s to forgive his entering into engagements with the county of Southampton, he is certain that his R— H— will not condemn his adhering to those engagements, when entered into.

God forbid Mr. Legge should be suspected of triumphing over the P— of W—'s inclinations! The contrary was so much his intention, that from the moment he discovered which way those inclinations lay, there was no endeavour he did not use to avoid the dispute with honour; nor did Mr. Legge exert himself, either in point of expence or personal application, till, all compromise being rejected, he had no other part left to act.

Mr. Legge is obliged to Lord B. for the friendship he expresses towards him. Surely his lordship cannot doubt, but that Mr. Legge should be extremely glad if he could find himself in such a situation as would permit him to have the honour of obeying the P— of W—'s commands, and seconding his wishes, without the breaking the faith he has openly and publickly pledged to the county of Southampton. This if he were to do, he should forfeit all title to the P— of W—'s countenance and protection as certainly as he knows he should forfeit his R—— H——'s private good opinion."

Here the correspondence ended: The late Majesty died the year following, and at the end of the first session of parliament, after his present Majesty's accession, Mr. Legge was dismissed, or, as he chose to expect it, turned out, after having served the crown and the public, in his department, during that session, with his usual ability and fidelity.

AMERICAN INTELLIGENCE.

QUEBEC, February 18.

THE former part of the winter we had severe, tho' not constant cold. There is now the most enormous quantity of snow on the ground I ever saw; the paths are hardened and kept open by constant usage. The snow here fertilizes the ground, like the waters of the Nile. The Farmer judges of his future harvest from the quantity of the snow. The river still remains open, tho' floating islands are daily hurried through its rapid current.

PROVIDENCE, (in Rhode-Island) March 4.

We are assured, that his Majesty has nominated sixteen Commissioners (who are officers of the Crown in different parts of America) to adjust and ascertain the boundaries of New-England and other neighbouring colonies; and that four of these gentlemen reside at Halifax, and are soon expected from thence at Boston.

NEW-YORK, March 14.

The deputies from the Delaware Indians, who by treaty with Col. Bouquet, were to meet sir William Johnson, in order to enter into a peace on behalf of their nation, are at length arrived at Johnson-Hall, having been greatly obstructed by the deep snow. The Delawares who fled last winter from the parties of Indians, sent out by Sir William, are likewise on their way to him, with several prisoners yet remaining among them.

Last week was killed at Morrisania, at the farm of Lewis Morris, Esq; in the county of Westchester, where it was raised, an Ox of six years old, that weighed 1247 lb.

April 6.

Commodore Grant, with a number of men, departed since our last for the lakes, to take upon him the command there.

By advices from New-Orleans of the 18 of February, we find that place was then in possession of the French, the Spaniards were not arrived, nor had they any certain advices whether they would come at all, or not.

BOSTON, March 18.

We hear from Montreal, that on the 16th of January, in the night, about 30 men with fix'd bayonets, broke open the goal and carried off two men confined there: But being followed by another party, the prisoners were retaken and returned to prison. However, about midnight the party came again, broke open the goal on the back side, and carried off the prisoners.

PHILADELPHIA, March 21.

Extract of a Letter from Carlisle, dated March 14.

"An affair has lately happened in the upper end of Cumberland, which has given us, and the best thinking people of the county, much uneasiness. Sometime ago, Capt. Calender employed several waggons to carry Indian goods to Mr. Pollan's, in Conogochieg, to be carried thence by pack-horses to Fort-Pitt. Unhappily the head came out of one of the barrels, which was full of scalping-knives (say the people) pruning-knives say others, the news of this alarmed the upper end of the county, and the neighbouring parts of Maryland and Virginia; upon which advertisements were posted up, inviting all to join and prevent the carrying ammunition and such like things to the Indians, by which the frontiers had suffered so much before.—(This we in Carlisle heard by the pack-horse masters who came down to the settlement.)—Our next news was, that a number from Maryland, Virginia, and Conogochieg, had followed and overtaken eighty-one horses laden with goods, killed the horses, fired at the drivers, and burned the goods, which alarmed us very much.—Hereupon Mr. Calender rode thither, by whom on his return we learned, that 4 or 5 horses were shot, and sixty-one horseloads of goods were burned; eighteen loads of rum, and two of match coating were saved; we understand likewise that Robert Alison, who had undertaken to carry out part of said goods, was dispatched from Loudon, with a number of Highlanders to the place where this happened, viz. near Sidling-Hill, and upon their return to Loudon, took up two or three people whom they suspected, and brought to Loudon, upon which we are informed, several parties appeared in arms about Louden, and demanded the men to be enabled upon bail, which was accordingly done, and then Mr. Calender returned to Carlisle.

We are further informed that another party, supposed to be mostly from the borders of Maryland, met at Pollan's, alias Howe's, and examined the remainder of the goods, and searched for ammunition, but finding none went to Mr. Maxwell's, where they found and burned some casks of powder.—This, Sir, is the truest account we could learn.—It gives us much concern that an affair of this nature should have at all happened and the rather as the innocent will share in the reproach: But this is not to be omitted, which gives us a good deal of satisfaction, that few, if any of the principal inhabitants of Conogochieg were concerned, and that upon understanding that there was a design of this nature carried on by some hot-headed, rash people, they used their utmost endeavours to discourage and dissuade them from such an undertaking. Particularly William Smith, Esq; and John McD[illegible] all their might to crush it.

We make no doubt, Sir, from the temper[illegible] vail with some, but that the body of Conog[illegible] will be represented as concerned, and from the [illegible] which some are already discovering, we are ready to [illegible] that endeavours will be used, and innuendo's given [illegible] whole county will be traduced as privy, or accessaries to a [illegible] which we heartily condemn; we therefore most humbly request, Sir, that you will inform our friends of the true state of the affair, and we hope that the most thinking and virtuous of every society, will not easily admit innuendoes and indiscriminate reflections, which men may too liberally pour out on the county in general."

March 28.

On Saturday last his honour the Governor set out for Carlisle, attended by some gentlemen, in order to enquire, we hear, into the cause of a quantity of goods being destroyed by a number of men near Sidling Hill.

On Saturday night last came on here a very severe snow storm, the wind blowing very high, which continued all the next day, when it is believed, there fell the greatest quantity of Snow that has been known (considering the advanced season) for many years past; it being generally said to be about two feet, or two feet and an half, on a level, and in some places deeper.

Extract of a Letter from Carlisle, March 19, 1765.

"Some few days ago, we transmitted you an account of the Conogochig affair, according to the last information we could get, and tho' we had later accounts; yet nothing contrary, to what we gave you. A few days ago William Smith, Esq; came to Carlisle, from whom we have had a very circumstantial narrative, viz. That upon the first report of goods being upon the road, the country were alarmed, hearing that a vast quantity of ammunition and scalping knives were carrying out; that many of the people had applied to him, complaining that before there was any confirmed account of a peace being established with the Indians, ammunition should be sent to them; alledging that if it had been by authority, either some of the King's troops would have escorted the ammunition, or the General's orders been made known, and hence concluded that it must be the mere motion of some merchants who wanted to catch the benefit of an early commerce with the savages. So reasoned the people. Mr. Smith advised them, not to raise any disturbance, and to satisfy themselves by enquiring of one Winston who accompanied said goods; the young man was not condescending enough to humour the people, which increased their suspicion and raised their indignation. A part of the goods at length set off, and as the carriers were passing into the Great-Cove by the house of said William Smith, they are overtaken by a considerable body of men armed, who seemed much enraged; but by the endeavours of Mr. Smith, and the fair words of Elias Davies and Robert Alison who were employed to carry out said goods, were persuaded not to stop the horses, and a good many went home; but still a great number, suspecting that there was ammunition among the goods, followed into the Great-Cove, where said Davies and Alison opened such loads as were most suspected, and convinced them that there was no ammunition; at this the people seemed satisfied, and next morning as Elias Davies who was to go no further than the Cove, returned, the greatest part of the people returned with him, he thought they had all come back, and they passed Mr. Smith's house. Mr. Smith believed this to be the case, and all danger was over. But Mr. Smith thinks a few, not above 15 or 16 * according to the best accounts he could get, had parted that morning from the rest and privately followed the carriers, and near Sidling-Hill did the mischief, viz. shot six horses and burnt about sixty loads of goods. Mr. Smith was for some time of the opinion that it was done by a company from Virginia, as a report prevailed among them, that the Virginians on the frontiers had so threatened.

"As to the consequent burning of seven or eight casks of powder at Mr. Maxwell's, our opinion that it was by a company from Maryland, is more confirmed by a deposition made this day before John Holmes, by one Mr. Volgomot in Maryland, near Potomack, who being occasionally here, was taken up on suspicion by Capt. Calender, who was threatened to be put into goal unless he would give bail for his appearance; he deposed that on the 10th instant, a number of armed men rode by his house towards Pennsylvania, he enquired whither they were going, but gave him no other answer, But, up the road.—That said company returned next day, and he again asked where they had been, they answered, up the road,—and further said, that on that or the next day, one Prator told him, that said company had destroyed the powder at Maxwell's.—And we are of the opinion, that the greatest part of the people who first followed the carriers, were mostly about the line.—I would only add, that however unreasonable the carrying out of goods, especially ammunition to the Indians (before there is the certainty of a peace) appears to many, yet all the sensible thinking people I have conversed with, condemn the conduct of those who seized and destroyed them."

The carriers in their affidavits, say about 20.

For the ENTERTAINMENT of the

CURIOUS,

Will be exhibited, at a convenient room in Mr. Backhouse's tavern, a courſe of experiments in that inſtructive and entertaining branch of natural philoſophy, call'd ELECTRICITY, to be accompanied with lectures on the nature and properties of Electric Fire,

By WILLIAM JOHNSON.

THE courſe conſiſts of two lectures:—In the firſt of which, all the properties of that wonderful element, as far as the lateſt diſcoveries have made us acquainted therewith, are demonſtrated in a number of curious and entertaining experiments, many of which are entirely new. In the ſecond lecture, this fire is ſhewn to be real lightning, and in that view conſider'd (as it really is) as one of the moſt awful powers of nature. Moſt of the effects of lightning are imitated by the electric fire, ſuch as, killing animals, melting metal, tearing and rending bodies thro' which it paſſes; together with many curious experiments, naturally repreſenting the various phænomena of thunder ſtorms, accounting for their cauſes, and explaining their effects. A practical method of preſerving ourſelves and our houſes from the deſtructive violence of lightning, will likewiſe be ſhewn, the efficacy of which will be demonſtrated by ſuch indubitable proofs, from experience, as have not yet been exhibited to the world. The endeavouring to guard againſt lightning, in the manner propoſed, ſhews not to be chargeable with preſumption, nor inconſiſtent with any of the principles of natural or revealed religion.
